

Implementation of renewable energy solutions offers a chance for some restructuring within the Barbados economy.

According to Governor of the Central Bank, Dr De Lisle Worrell, such implementation would create greater job opportunities as well as opportunities for economic expansion in areas which did not exist before.

But Worrell cautioned alternative energy will not take firm root in the society unless the economics are right, suggesting that tax incentives may have to be considered if “at the initial stages it turns out that the economics are not yet right”.
